IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1950

CRANE COMPANY, A CORPORATION UNDER THE LAWS OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS, Petitioner,

vs.

SAM K. CARSON, COMMISSIONER OF FINANCE AND TAXATION OF THE STATE OF TENNESSEE, Respondent.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE SUPREME COURT OF TENNESSEE

To the Honorable Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

CRANE COMPANY, a corporation under the laws of the State of Illinois, prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment of the Supreme Court of Tennessee entered in the above-entitled case on July 15, 1950.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the Chancellor in the trial court and the opinion of the Supreme Court of Tennessee are as yet unreported.

The opinion of the Chancellor is found in the record on pages 134 to 138.

The opinion of the Supreme Court of Tennessee is found in the record on pages 140 to 146.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Tennessee was entered on July 15, 1950 (R. 146).

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C., Sec. 1257(3). There is involved the validity of the systematic administration of two Tennessee statutes, which impose two separate privilege taxes on corporations. One of these statutes, imposing the corporate "excise" tax, is contained in Sections 1316 et seq. of the Code of Tennessee (Appendix A, infra, pp. 15-17); the statute containing the "franchise" tax is contained in Sections 1248.143 et seq. of the Code of Tennessee (Appendix A, infra, pp. 17-21).

Petitioner avers that the State of Tennessee, in requiring it to pay taxes computed under allocation formulas instead of those shown due under its separate accounting for Tennessee, the accuracy of which separate accounting the Tennessee court expressly acknowledged (R. 135), has taxed profits and values outside Tennessee in violation of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Petitioner so averred in its original pleadings in these cases (R. 6, 21, 35). Petitioner's evidence was to a large extent devoted to presentation of facts establishing this. The court of first instance expressly recognized the pendency of this question:

> The question involved in this cause is whether the application of the statutory excise and franchise tax formulas to complainant results in violation of the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment (Opinion of Chancellor, R. 136).

The trial court held that:

> . . . the application of the formulas contained in the excise and franchise taxing statutes has not resulted in an arbitrary and palpably disproportionate allocation to Tennessee of income actually earned in another state or net worth actually employed outside the borders of Tennessee (Opinion of Chancellor, R. 138).

Petitioner in like manner insisted before the Supreme Court of Tennessee that there was a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. The First, Second and Fifth Assignments of Errors of Law were based thereon (Appendix B, infra, pp. 21-23), and like insistence was made at length in petitioner's brief and upon oral argument.

In its opinion, denying relief to this petitioner, the Supreme Court of Tennessee, referring to the ruling of this Court in Hans Rees' Sons v. North Carolina, 283 U.S. 123, said that in that case

> . . . it was held that the result was so arbitrary and unreasonable as to violate the due process and equal protection clauses of the 14th Amendment. We have no such situation here (italics supplied; R. 144, 145).

The Supreme Court of Tennessee said further in its opinion:

> . . . there is nothing to indicate that application of the statutory formulas did not produce a fair and just result, nor to indicate that any right of the Complainant under the 14th Amendment was infringed (R. 146).

QUESTION PRESENTED

Whether a state taxes extraterritorial profits and values and thus acts unconstitutionally when it requires a corporation, domesticated therein, to recompute under an arbitrary formula and pay large additional amounts as privilege taxes after the corporation has already paid in full all of the privilege taxes imposed by the state's statutes as computed upon a separate accounting of the corporation's profits and properties in that state, and which separate accounting the state court itself finds (R. 135) was a correct accounting.

STATUTES INVOLVED

The pertinent statutory provisions are printed in Appendix A, infra, pp. 15-21.

STATEMENT

Petitioner, Crane Company, is an Illinois corporation, qualified in most of the states, including Tennessee, and doing business nationally and internationally (R. 8, 22, 36, 44, 45). It is engaged in two activities:

(a) the manufacture of valves, pipes, plumbing fixtures, cast iron enamelware and heating equipment (R. 45, 73, 74);

(b) the wholesale and retail sale of a number of products, about fifty percent of which are its own manufactured products (R. 74, 84, 124-125, 134).

Petitioner's principal business in Tennessee is manufacturing (R. 8, 22, 36, 74).

Tennessee imposes two corporate taxes on corporations doing business therein:

(a) The excise tax, enacted first in 1923, is described by the Tennessee courts as a privilege tax, and is at the rate of 3.75% of net profits earned in the state (Appendix A, infra, pp. 15-17).

(b) The franchise tax, later enacted (1937), is also described by the Tennessee courts as a privilege tax, and is at the rate of 15 cents per one hundred dollars of the outstanding capital stock, surplus and undivided profits (Appendix A, infra, pp. 17-21).

Both statutes contain formulas for apportionment, the excise tax on the basis of property, manufacturing costs and sales, and the franchise tax on the basis of property and manufacturing costs (Appendix A, infra, pp. 15, 16, 19).

Petitioner so maintains all its procedures and records, including its accounting records, as to show with exactitude how much property it has in Tennessee and how much profit or loss it sustains in any fiscal period from Tennessee operations (R. 48-134; Exhibits 1, 3 and 5 to Deposition of F. H. Kaiser at pages 162, 164 and 166 of the certified copy of the record). The accuracy of petitioner's records is expressly acknowledged (R. 135) by the Tennessee court in the present proceedings.

In 1945 and 1946, petitioner sustained very substantial losses on its Tennessee operations, and in 1947 did only a little better than break even thereon (Exhibits 1, 3 and 5 to Deposition of F. H. Kaiser at pages 162, 164 and 166 of the certified copy of the record). It showed that these undesirable results were temporary and were experienced during these years because certain serious operating difficulties, occasioned largely by war and conversion problems, handicapped petitioner's manufacturing facilities in Tennessee (R. 48-134).

Both of the Tennessee taxing statutes provide in identical words that if, because of peculiar or unusual circumstances inherent in a particular case, the use of the allocation formulas, prescribed for general use, would work a hardship on the taxpayer, its tax may be computed by such other method as will be equitable and just (Appendix A, infra, pp. 16, 17, 20).

Petitioner, having found that the use of the formulas did work a hardship on it for these years, computed its taxes on the basis of its property and activities in Tennessee alone, as revealed by its records, and requested permission to pay its taxes on that basis (R. 75). Respondent refused to permit this to be done, and required petitioner to compute and pay said taxes according to the allocation formulas. As a result of this method of computation, approximately the following results were obtained:

a 1945 actual loss of $400,000 was taxed as an $872,000 profit, a 1946 actual loss of $629,000 was taxed as a $1,046,000 profit, a 1947 actual profit of $49,000 was taxed as $1,900,000 profit (R. 103);

and a net worth figure of $9,300,000 was increased to over $15,185,000, as a basis for imposing the franchise tax (Exhibits 5 and 6 to Deposition of F. H. Kaiser at pages 166 and 167 of the certified copy of the record).

In 1947, petitioner's net profit in Tennessee was $49,332.55 and its privilege taxes in Tennessee were $67,929.33 (Exhibits 5 and 6 to Deposition of F. H. Kaiser at pages 166 and 167 of the certified copy of the record).

Suits for recovery of the additional taxes thus imposed were timely instituted in accordance with Tennessee statutes (R. 10, 23, 38). Petitioner asserted and insisted that, although the Tennessee legislature had enacted valid statutes by including provisions for relief where the effect of the allocation formulas was to tax extraterritorial values, yet the systematic administration of the taxing statutes, in denying relief to petitioner, did result in the taxation of extraterritorial values in violation of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Both the trial court and the Supreme Court of Tennessee held that there was no violation of the due process clause, and denied recovery (R. 134-146).

SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS TO BE URGED

The Supreme Court of Tennessee erred:

1. In holding that, during the three years involved, the State of Tennessee could constitutionally tax an average of 7.71% of petitioner's income, earned everywhere, when, according to accounting records the accuracy of which is established, petitioner sustained a net operating loss during said three years of $991,159.06 from Tennessee operations.

2. In holding that, during the same period, the State of Tennessee could increase the basis of a concurrent and additional privilege tax—the franchise tax—from $9,298,191.96 to $15,185,316.42, when admittedly the smaller base figure was the correct value of petitioner's property in Tennessee.

3. In refusing to enforce, in conjunction with the taxing powers of the state, that portion of the taxing statutes the inclusion of which was necessary to give them constitutionality under the Fourteenth Amendment.

Unquestionably, an allocation formula manifestly fair on its face may be inequitable in result in a specific case, as is evidenced by the result actually achieved in the present case.

Structural deficiency may invalidate the formula; inequity in result, the particular application. This was well summarized by Mr. Justice Cardozo in Norfolk & Western Ry. v. North Carolina, 297 U.S. 682, 685, as follows:

> This is not to say that the tax is valid, as imposed. A formula not arbitrary on its face or in its general operation may be unworkable or unfair when applied to a particular railway in particular conditions. Cf. Hans Rees' Sons v. North Carolina, 283 U.S. 123, 129, 132; Southern Ry. Co. v. Kentucky, 274 U.S. 76, 83, 88.

The Tennessee statutes were validly drafted because, after providing rational and reasonable bases for general application, the legislature, recognizing the correctness of the above propositions of law and that there would be circumstances where the application of a formula of approximation would be unjust, added the provision that "If, because of peculiar or unusual circumstances inherent in a particular case, the application of the above formulas would work a hardship or injustice," another method which was just and fair should be used.

There have been repeated complaints to the Supreme Court of Tennessee recently about the inequity of the application of the formula in certain cases[1] Without exception, and regardless of circumstances, that court has refused to grant relief, and has thus nullified the saving provision of the taxing statutes, at least in the instant case, where the taxing result achieved is palpably disproportionate. From the practical standpoint of the taxpayer, therefore, the relief provision may as well have been left out of the statute by the legislature. When taxpayers, repeatedly complaining, are repeatedly and without exception denied constitutional relief to which they aver they are entitled, the situation existing in that state bears investigation by this Court in at least one instance. In none of the other cases has this Court been requested to review this unaltering conclusion of the Tennessee court of last resort.

4. In holding that the theory of allocation was applicable where units in the taxing state did not contribute to the economic welfare of the units outside the taxing state.

The fundamental concept of the rule permitting use of the allocation formula is that it is applicable to any business only if the unit in the taxing state contributed to the economic benefit of the whole. Fargo v. Hart, 193 U.S. 490, 499, 500.

The logic of the necessity of this prerequisite factor has impressed all of the courts that have considered it: Piedmont & N. Ry. Co. v. Query, 56 F. 2d 172, 175; Burkhart Mfg. Co. v. Coale, 345 Mo. 1131, 139 S.W. 2d 502, 503; McCrory v. Commissioner, 280 Mass. 273, 182 N.E. 481, 484-5. Even statutory recognition of this limitation in principle is accorded by most states in providing that certain items of income shall be treated separately.

5. In holding that the decision of this Court in Hans Rees' Sons v. North Carolina, 283 U. S. 123, is no longer governing, even where the result of the use of an allocation formula is to tax extraterritorial values and profits.

The Hans Rees case is still governing, and has been cited and quoted by this Court with approval, even where the facts then before the Court produced a contrary result. Cf. Norfolk & Western Ry. v. North Carolina, 297 U.S. 682; Ford Motor Co. v. Beauchamp, 308 U.S. 331; Butler Bros. v. McColgan, 315 U.S. 501; International Harvester Co. v. Evatt, 329 U.S. 416.

Cases which have ruled against the complaining taxpayer have simply found that the particular complainant who was in court that day did not measure up to its requisite need of proving that it had paid its tax in equitable amount on the business it had done or the properties it had in the taxing state (cases cited above).

6. In holding that petitioner's business was "unitary" and that it was, therefore, subject to an allocation formula, regardless of the palpably disproportionate result reached.

Mr. Justice Holmes once said:

> In the law we only occasionally can reach an absolutely final and quantitative determination . . . but it is the essence of improvement that we should be as accurate as we can.[2]

Allocation for "unitary" enterprises has been adopted and approved frequently because there was not available a more accurate means of determining the bases for tax.

Frequently, too, complainant has proffered a separation the accuracy of which was questioned and which the complainant failed to sustain by proof.

But, when, as here, a separation is tendered and proven, the accuracy of which is recognized by the court, there is no occasion to resort to an allocation, which is admittedly and necessarily an approximation, in lieu of the unquestioned exactitude of the separate basis.

Unity of ownership is in no wise determinative, where there is segregation of profits and values arising from diverse activities, and where the divisions are separate economic units.

7. In holding that the case is governed by the decision of this Court in Butler Bros. v. McColgan, 315 U. S. 501.

This Court, in Butler Bros., stated that appellant's accounting failed to show that California operations did not contribute to the net income. Crane Company's accounting shows that only a loss resulted to it in Tennessee operations, and the accuracy of this accounting is established here. In Butler Bros., the Court said:

> There is no justification on this record for singling out the San Francisco branch rather than another and concluding that it made no contribution to those savings . . . The fact of the matter is that appellant has not shown the precise sources of its net income of $1,149,677. If factors which are responsible for that net income are present in other states but not present in California, they have not been revealed. At least in absence of that proof, California was justified in assuming that the San Francisco branch contributed its aliquot share to the advantages of centralized management of this unitary enterprise and to the net income earned (315 U. S. pp. 508-9; italics supplied).

Butler Bros. had but one activity and one profit, captured at the conclusion of both intrastate and out-of-state activities. In the instant case, when activities within the state were concluded, a profit was determined from competitive prices and reported in petitioner's books, and for which it charged itself and paid tax (R. 47-48, 79-80, 86-87, 98-103); subsequent profit, inuring from activities outside Tennessee, were not a proper subject of tax for Tennessee.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

1. The effect of this ruling, culminating a series of decisions against corporations doing business in Tennessee who have also complained of unjust treatment by Tennessee in taxation under these statutes[3], is to render unconstitutional the Tennessee taxing statutes in their practical effect on the taxpaying corporation, because the Tennessee court's rulings nullify the identical relief provision in both statutes which gave the statutes constitutionality as drafted. The statutes were constitutional as drafted only because they provided an alternative method of computation which avoids taxing extraterritorial values in certain cases where the general formula would have that effect.

2. The Tennessee court found that petitioner's separate accounting correctly reflected its operations and properties in Tennessee (R. 135). It followed that the tax should have been computed on that basis. When, instead, the Tennessee taxing authority imposed and the Tennessee court of last resort sustained a far greater tax, they have, of necessity, taxed profits and properties outside the state in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.

3. The Tennessee administrative taxing authority is permitted by the Supreme Court of Tennessee to thus repeatedly tax extraterritorial values of corporations doing interstate business which find it expedient to do business in Tennessee, and, with this established procedure thus sustained by the court of last resort in Tennessee, corrective action by this Court is the only recourse for such corporations to obtain relief from taxation that is unjust and illegal under the Federal Constitution.

If a state in a contemporaneously vital position in the national defense be permitted, without review, to discriminate in taxation against business entities engaged in national and international activities, there will result a serious deterrant to the highly desirable and necessary free flow of commerce, trade and production, and a handicap to the national economy which is vital to this nation's survival in a precarious international competition. Lack of recognition by a state court of last resort of valid distinctions in fact and law which have been enunciated by this Court could thus result in crippling our national indivisible efficiency.

4. The Supreme Court of Tennessee, in failing to accord recognition to the decision of this Court in Hans Rees' Sons v. North Carolina, 283 U.S. 123, with reference to cases that validly come under the principles there enunciated, systematically deprives interstate corporations of rights guaranteed under the Federal Constitution, affording them no possibility of enforcing those rights except through review by this Court.

The Hans Rees case, supra, and Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Chamberlain, 254 U.S. 113, and cases following it[4] reached different results because different factual situations were presented. Neither line of cases has been overruled; both are based upon logical reasoning. In Hans Rees, the taxpayer had properly segregated profit from activities arising within from profits arising outside the taxing state; in Underwood Typewriter and those cases following it, the taxpayer failed to show that this had been done. In the present case, the taxpayer, upon conclusion of any activity within Tennessee, determined all the profit that had accrued to it up to that point (making this determination, not arbitrarily, but on the basis of open market, competitive conditions), and reported and paid tax thereon. Its subsequent activities, segregated in fact, in procedure, and in accounting, were completely outside the State of Tennessee and were not subject to taxation by Tennessee. Failure to recognize this valid distinction accounts for the denial of relief by the Tennessee court.

Its refutation of this Court's decision in the Hans Rees case is without warrant. That case still stands as good law in this Court.[5]

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

CHARLES L. CLAUNCH,
Counsel for Petitioner.

APPENDIX A

Tennessee Corporate Excise Tax

CODE OF TENNESSEE, SECTION 1316:

1316. Tax imposed.—All corporations, cooperatives conducted for profit, joint-stock associations and business trusts, organized under the laws of the State of Tennessee, other than those organized for general welfare and not for profit, and all such entities organized under the laws of any other state or country for profit and doing business in Tennessee, shall, without exception, pay to the commissioner of finance and taxation annually an excise tax, in addition to all other taxes, equal to three and three-quarters per cent. (3.75%) of the net earnings for their next preceding fiscal or calendar year, from business done within the state.

In the case of corporations, cooperatives, joint-stock associations and business trusts doing business in Tennessee and elsewhere, the net earnings shall be apportioned as hereinafter set forth and the net earnings thus apportioned to Tennessee shall be deemed to be the earnings arising from business done within the state and shall be the measure of this tax. Such method of apportionment shall be as follows:

(1) If the principal business in this state is manufacturing or if it is any form of collecting, assembling or processing of goods or material, the entire net earnings shall be apportioned to Tennessee on the basis of the ratio obtained by taking the arithmetical average of the following three ratios:

(a) The ratio of the value of its real estate and tangible personal property in this state on the date of the close of the fiscal year is to the value of its entire real estate and tangible personal property, with no deductions on account of encumbrances thereon.

(b) The ratio of the total cost of manufacturing, collecting, assembling or processing within this state, to the total cost of manufacturing, collecting, assembling or processing within and without the state.

(c) The ratio of the gross sales to customers within Tennessee is to the total gross sales from all sources.

(2) If the principal business in this state is selling, distributing, dealing in or using tangible personal property, the entire net earnings shall be apportioned to Tennessee on the basis of the ratio obtained by taking the arithmetical average of the following three ratios:

(a) The ratio of the value of its real estate and tangible personal property in this state on the day of the close of the fiscal year is to the value of its entire real estate and tangible personal property then owned by it, with no deductions on account of encumbrances thereon.

(b) The ratio of the total sales made through or by offices, agencies, or branches located in Tennessee during the income year to the total sales made everywhere during said year.

(c) The ratio of the gross sales to customers within Tennessee is to the total gross sales from all sources.

(3) If the principal business is other than the manufacture or sale of tangible property, such proportion as its gross receipts in Tennessee during the income year is to its gross receipts for such year within and without the state.

If, because of peculiar or unusual circumstances inherent in a particular case, the application of the above formulas would work a hardship or injustice, the commissioner, upon application of the taxpayer and upon such showing, is authorized, with the approval of the attorney-general, to adopt such other method of apportionment as would be fair and just under the facts of the case.

Tennessee insurance companies shall pay on net earnings proportioned to premiums on policies on persons and property in this state. (1923, ch. 21, sec. 1; 1927, ch. 44, Modified; 1937, ch. 99, sec. 1; 1937, ch. 176, sec. 1.)

Tennessee Corporate Franchise Tax

CODE OF TENNESSEE, SECTIONS 1248.143 et seq.:

1248.143. Tax imposed; rate and measure.—All corporations organized under the laws of the State of Tennessee, other than those organized for general welfare and not for profit, and all corporations organized under the laws of any other state or country for profit and doing business in Tennessee shall, without exception other than as provided in section 2 [Sec. 1248.144] hereof, pay to the commissioner of finance and taxation annually a privilege tax in addition to all other taxes, the rate and measure of which are hereinafter set forth. The tax hereby imposed shall be paid for the privilege of engaging in business in corporate form in this state and shall be in addition to all other taxes levied by any other act.

The tax hereinbefore levied shall also be paid by all business trusts, commonly known as Massachusetts Trusts for the privilege of doing business in Tennessee and the word "corporation" when used herein shall be deemed to include a business trust unless the particular context require a different meaning.

The privilege tax hereby imposed shall be a tax of fifteen cents (15c) on the one hundred dollars ($100), or major fraction thereof, of the issued and outstanding stock, surplus and undivided profits of each such corporation as shown by the books and records of such corporation at the close of its last calendar or fiscal year preceding the making of the sworn report hereinafter required.

Where a corporation doing business without surplus or undivided profits has had the value of its capital stock impaired by operating deficits or other business losses, such as fire, flood, tornado, etc., and where such deficit or loss is carried upon the books and records of the corporation as an impairment of capital, the measure of the tax shall be diminished by such loss or deficit.

The value of the stock held by any corporation in any other corporation paying the tax herein levied upon such second corporation shall be deducted from the measure of the tax.

The measure of the tax hereby imposed shall in no case be less than the actual value of the real and tangible personal property owned or used by such corporation in this state and no corporation when paying tax upon the minimum basis herein set forth shall be permitted to insist that the assessed valuation of real and tangible personal property in Tennessee is greater than the actual value thereof. This provision is intended to fix a minimum tax base and not to substitute the value of property owned or used in Tennessee for the measure of the tax hereinbefore provided.

The tax imposed by this act shall apply to corporations whose business is being conducted by a receivership or trusteeship appointed by any court of competent jurisdiction and shall continue to accrue until such time as the corporation has been actually and legally dissolved or withdrawn from this state.

The minimum tax payable under this act shall be ten dollars ($10.00).

The tax herein levied shall be a tax for state purposes only and no county or municipality shall have the power to levy a similar tax. (1937, ch. 100, sec. 1.)

1248.144. Credit of payments by insurance companies as tax on gross premiums.—There shall be credited upon the tax hereby imposed such net amounts as are paid by insurance companies to this state as a tax upon gross premiums collected by them, not including the gross premium receipts tax paid by fire insurance companies for the purpose of executing the fire marshal law. There shall be no other credits. (1937, ch. 100, sec. 2.)

1248.145. Apportionment of tax to Tennessee.—In the case of corporations doing business in Tennessee and elsewhere the measure of the tax as herein above set forth shall be apportioned to Tennessee for the purpose of taxation in the following manner:

(1) If the principal business in this state is manufacturing or if it is any form of collecting, assembling or processing goods or materials, the capital stock, surplus and undivided profits shall be apportioned to Tennessee on the basis of the ratio obtained by taking the arithmetical average of the following two ratios:

(a) The ratio of the value of its real estate and tangible personal property in this state on the date of the close of the fiscal year is to the value of its entire real estate and tangible personal property, with no deductions on account of encumbrances thereon.

(b) The ratio of the total cost of manufacturing, collecting, assembling or processing within this state, to the total cost of manufacturing, collecting, assembling or processing within and without the state.

(2) If the principal business in this state is selling, distributing, dealing in or using tangible personal property, the capital stock, surplus and undivided profits shall be apportioned to Tennessee on the basis of the ratio obtained by taking the arithmetical average of the following two ratios:

(a) The ratio of the value of its real estate and tangible personal property in this state on the day of the close of its fiscal year is to the value of its entire real estate and tangible personal property then owned by it, with no deductions on account of encumbrances thereon.

(b) The ratio of the total sales made through or by offices, agencies, or branches located in Tennessee during the income year to the total sales made everywhere during said year.

(3) If the principal business is other than the manufacture or sale of tangible property, such proportion as its gross receipts in Tennessee during the income year is to its gross receipts for such year within and without the state.

If, because of peculiar or unusual circumstances inherent in a particular case, the application of the above formulas would work a hardship or injustice, the commissioner, upon application of the taxpayer and upon such showing, is authorized, with the approval of the attorney-general, to adopt such other method of apportionment as would be fair and just under the facts of the case.

When corporations are doing business in Tennessee and elsewhere, only that part of the capital, surplus and undivided profits properly allocable to Tennessee by the manner of apportionment hereinabove set forth, shall be used as a measure of the tax subject to the other provisions of this act with reference to a minimum measure and minimum tax.

If the capital stock of a corporation which is a subsidiary of another corporation or closely affiliated therewith by stock ownership is inadequate for its business needs apart from credit extended or indebtedness guaranteed by the parent or an affiliated corporation, in determining the amount of capital, surplus and undivided profits of such corporation with respect to its liability for the tax imposed by this act, there shall be included in the measure of the tax the indebtedness owed to or guaranteed by the parent or an affiliated corporation. If necessary to apportion such indebtedness the methods of allocation heretofore set forth shall be used. (1937, ch. 100, sec. 3.)

APPENDIX B

Assignments of Errors of Law Raising Constitutional Question Before Supreme Court of Tennessee

1. The Chancellor erred in ruling that the use, in computing appellant's taxes, of the formulas which are prescribed by the statutes for general use did not result in appellant's case in arbitrary and palpably disproportionate allocation to Tennessee of income actually earned in another State or net worth actually employed outside the borders of Tennessee (Tr. 172).

Legislative recognition of the inapplicability of the general formula has been included in the statutes, and where, as here, disproportionate and unjust results emanate from its use, constitutional administration of the taxing statutes requires relief be afforded a complying taxpayer. Hans Rees' Sons v. North Carolina, 283 U.S. 123, S. Ct. 385.

Here the taxpayer has complied by showing (1) both "unusual" and "peculiar" circumstances inherent in its particular case, (2) hardship, and (3) an alternative method of computation by separate accounting, which shows the true facts. This having been done, the taxpayer is entitled to the relief provided by the Legislature for such cases, and the denial of such relief is in violation of the statutes, is unconscionable and unconstitutional in its result.

2. The Chancellor erred in ruling that the Commissioner did not abuse his discretion in refusing to allow appellant to avail itself of the provisions of the statutes designed to afford relief to the taxpayer where use of the general formulas works a hardship (Tr. 172).

The statute is constitutional only because it provides an alternative method of computation which avoids taxing extra-territorial values in certain cases where the general formula would have that effect. When, therefore, the Commissioner requires use of the general formula in such case, he has gone beyond the pale of the statutory discretion conferred upon him. This Court has repeatedly made assurances that the discretion conferred is subject to review by it, as it must necessarily be to assure constitutional administration of taxing statutes, where there can be no relief against wrongful executive action except by judicial fiat. Bank of Commerce & Trust Co. v. Senter, 149 Tenn. 569; Corn v. Fort, 170 Tenn. 377; Southern Coal Co. v. McCanless, 183 Tenn. 457. See also, California Packing Corporation v. State Tax Commission, 97 Utah 367, 93 P. (2d) 463.

5. The Chancellor erred in failing to rule that the effect of the Commissioner's action in imposing the allocation formulas upon appellant for computing its Tennessee corporate taxes for the years in question resulted in a taxation by the State of Tennessee of properties outside Tennessee and profits arising from business done outside Tennessee.

The ruling of the Chancellor nullifies that identical portion of the two taxing statutes which was included therein to insure their flexibility and thus avoid taxing extra-territorial values and profits in certain cases where the effect of the use of the allocation formulas is to so tax. Sections 1248.145 and 1316, Code of Tennessee.
